

How to Live Long— and Feel Young

Thousands of men and women who have passed their allotted "three-score-years-and-ten" owe their longevity to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

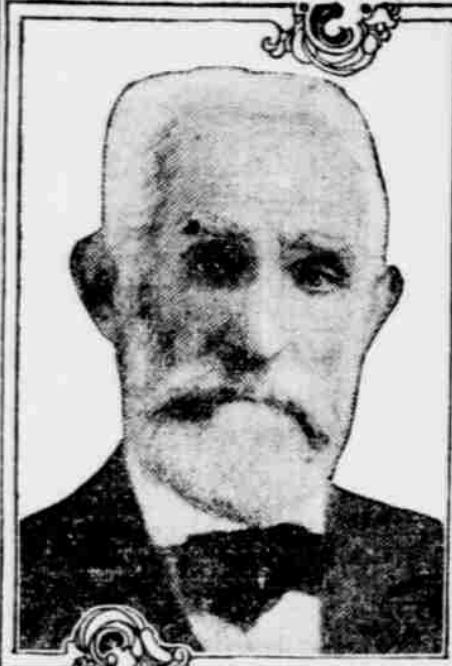

And with their advanced years has not come the doddering helplessness of old age; the spirit of youth has stayed with them.

At the Duffy Malt Whiskey Co.'s Laboratories in Rochester, N. Y., there are files of letters from men and women of over seventy—many who have almost reached the century mark—who used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey fifty years ago, and today in the sunset of their lives, they are still using it, still depending on it—for the good it has done and is doing them.

One of more than passing interest is given here: "I have been a constant user of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for many years, and although I am now past 78 years of age and soon will reach my seventy-ninth birthday, I can outwalk most of the young men of to-day. My strength and activity and my ability to enjoy life are due to the use of your valuable whiskey. I am now negotiating with a view of starting a fruit farm in either Washington or Michigan, as I feel like a young man with all the world before me. There is one thing certain, I will always keep Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey with me, and I can conscientiously recommend it to all old people if they wish to keep young and vigorous."

VANIMAN'S IN HOPEFUL MOOD

Says He Will Cross the Atlantic Ocean in a Week and Maybe it Will Take Less Than a Third of That Time.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 29.—"It is entirely possible to cross the Atlantic ocean in sixty hours, and I believe the day is coming when it will be done."

This is the assertion of Melvin Vaniman, the man who will lead the Seafaring-Vaniman expedition in an attempt to reach Europe in the airship "Akron" the early part of next month. While not declaring positively that he will make this record of sixty hours in crossing, Mr. Vaniman is of the opinion that he will make the trip in his big dirigible in from four to six days.

"It is barely possible that the 'Akron' will cross the ocean in sixty hours," continued Mr. Vaniman, "but I don't say we'll do it."

Mr. Vaniman and his airship will depend upon a storm for their success in the trans-Atlantic voyage. In explaining it, he said:

"So many people have the idea that a balloon or dirigible airship is always in danger when it encounters a storm. That is not true, because an airship goes with a storm and you wouldn't know you were moving unless you could see some object below you. A dirigible is just like a feather. If it gets into a storm, it goes just as fast as the storm."

"This year I will adopt an entirely different line of procedure than was in vogue last year when we attempted the crossing in the 'America.' This year, instead of getting into a storm, I will wait until a storm has developed on this coast and is well on its way toward Europe. Then I will run behind it and the 'Akron' will be drawn by the storm at the same speed it is traveling."

"Anyone can get a government chart and discover that every year, in October, storms start on this coast and sweep almost directly across the continent. These storms, it is shown, have a speed of from forty to fifty miles an hour. It is on one of these storms that we are depending for our success in crossing the Atlantic."

"Now, suppose we discover a storm that is starting from this coast at forty miles an hour. I am in close touch with all the wireless stations along the coast and this can easily be done. Then we will drop in behind the storm, catch its speed of forty miles an hour, and also add our own motive power of from thirty to thirty-six miles an hour. There you see we would have a speed of at least seventy miles and hour. So you can easily figure just about how long it would take us to cross under these conditions."

The car has been placed under the big gas bag and it is expected within two weeks to make a trial flight. The first one will be made over Atlantic City and the second one out to sea, where Mr. Vaniman will be enabled to test the practicability of the substitute which he has invented for the old equilibrium.

STRATEGY WON A POINT

A Wife Wanted to Buy a $200 Rug—She Didn't, However.

Strategy can sometimes be made as effective in domestic economy as in the operations of war. By way of illustration, consider an instance that recently arose in Colorado:

An ambitious young housewife out there had an opportunity to buy at a great bargain a handsome rug which she needed. The price was only $200, but the owner declared that the rug was actually worth $400. The young woman's husband, gently protested that even $200 was more than persons of their income could afford for a single article of household furnishing, but after much persuasions he consented to the purchase, as most husbands do in such cases. But this particular husband played a strategic game. When he gave his wife the money to pay for the rug it was not in currency notes of large denomination, but in the form of two hundred round, sound silver dollars.

The young woman was astounded. Until the money was counted down, dollar by dollar, she never had realized that it would take so many to pay for that rug. She decided to buy a $25 rug, but declared that if the money had been given to her in two notes of $100 each she would have bought the costlier one without hesitation.

WIVES MUST GIVE HELP

the thought that no calling or profession is so worthy of their best efforts; she will see to it that the books and papers that come into the family are those that treat farming and the farmer with respect. No one thing probably has had a more invidious influence in creating a desire among farm boys to leave the farm than the funny papers and cartoons which make the farmer the butt of their jokes, portraying him as the victim of the gold brick agent and picturing him with the vacant look and gaping mouth of an imbecile.

Cato, the Censor, lived at a time when Rome was at its height as a military power. He had held nearly all of the great offices under the Roman republic, yet in his old age he left this record, that: "No occupation was so worthy of the dignity of a man as that of farming," holding that "Farming makes the bravest men, and the sturdiest soldiers, and those who are busy with it have the fewest bad thoughts." And all down through the ages the most eminent men in all walks of life have left similar records of their high estimation of agriculture and those engaged in it. The farmer's wife should use her influence to see that this kind of literature is kept before her children in the farm home, in the curriculum of the school room, and in the school library.

In the time at my disposal I have been able to only hint at a few of the very many and diverse problems, as well as opportunities which belong to our women of the farm. I have tried to view them as a wife and mother of the soil, where, indeed, my life is cast, and my energies have been engrossed. I have endeavored to advance no fine spun theories, but to suggest a solution which can be and is being worked out today in many localities. That these and similar organizations are bound to come in abundance and that they will work untold good to the cause of conservation I fully believe. Once the farm wives of our country are adequately organized there is no divining the power for good that they may wield. There is an old saying: "Unless a man's mother ordains him for the ministry he won't make a good preacher." When a boy's mother ordains him for the farm there will be no lack of good farmers.

MY MORNING.

My golden morning! glad will I stay for you.

Wait till you come and my heart understands.

Touching my eyes that are dim while I pray for you.

Into the light with your beautiful hands.

And all my wonder shall be believing.

And all my vigil shall be fulfilled.

Sorrow and waiting and love's be-reaving.

With the light of my morning stayed and stilled.

O my morning, so filled with splendor.

Dawn of my midnights lashed with fire.

Peace of my dreams that my life shall render.

Hushed with the vision of life's desire.

How in the faithless should quicken your beaming?

They shall all pass and their voices be dumb.

And their eyes shall be blind who have turned from this dreaming.

But lo! I shall know that my morning has come.

My golden morning, my far, far morning!

Years have gone over, still you will shine.

Winter and rain come apace with their warning.

Bloom and the summer are sweet on the vine.

Ever they meet you, my hope and my yearning.

Steadfast out of the silence past.

Ever abiding, my faith that is burning—

Your glory shall find me and fold me at last.
